

Why I Call You My Tanngibly Blessed Sister,

This is more than a name—it's an identity, a declaration, a reminder of who you are and where God is leading you.

I call you Tanngibly Blessed because God's work in your life is real, visible, and touchable. His blessings are not distant promises; they are present, unfolding, and alive in you. You are blessed tangibly—not just in what you receive but in how He moves through you.

The double 'nn' in Tanngibly is intentional. It comes from my first name, Tanneisha, but it also represents the transformation God has led me through. Tann vs. Neisha—two versions of my journey.

- Tann represents who I am in Christ—a woman walking in the light, choosing wisdom, surrendering fully to God's plan.
- Neisha represents the life before surrender—a version of me making unhealthy choices, living outside of alignment with His calling.

Tann is my declaration of never turning back, of moving forward in faith, of choosing the path God has laid before me.

And that is what I pray for you, Tanngibly Blessed Sister. That you step forward boldly in your calling, that you recognize the tangible presence of God in your life, and that you never turn back to what He has already delivered you from.

This name is not just mine—it is yours, too. It is a reflection of your journey, your growth, your transformation. It is a reminder that you are seen, loved, and chosen.

You are Tanngibly Blessed, and my prayer is that you embrace it fully.

With faith & love,

Tann
